Plunkett Centre

Annual Report 2005
Mission Statement

The Mission of the Plunkett Centre is to promote the values of compassion and fellowship, intellectual and professional excellence, and fairness and justice. Its primary focus is on the realisation of these values in the provision and the allocation of health care. The Centre expresses this commitment through research, teaching and community engagement, and by bringing a Catholic perspective to all its endeavours.

The objectives of the Centre are

- to deepen and advance knowledge and understanding of the ethical standards relevant to human health and well-being, and in particular to clinical practice, medical research, business and management practice, and the allocation of healthcare resources;
- to offer courses in philosophical ethics and in the ethics of health care provision, medical research and health care resource allocation; and
- to engage and where appropriate to collaborate with local, national and international bodies as they seek to respond to their intellectual and ethical needs.

The Centre realises these objectives by

- conducting and promoting research;
- providing research training and supervision;
- developing and teaching courses;
- conducting ethical reviews of professional practice;
- offering an ethics consultation service; and
- participating in public discussion.

From the Director

Not everything that happens in a small research centre can be conveyed in its Annual Report. For instance, there is little mention within this report of the matters discussed at our annual seminar which, in 2005, was titled “Helping the Needy Stranger”. Let me mention the subject matter of each of the three talks given on that occasion.

Raimond Gaita contrasted two conceptions of the ‘ethical’, one which focuses on justice, respect for autonomy, integrity, courage and the other virtues of character, the other which following Socrates focuses on personal goodness. Raimond Gaita argued that only the second conception can give us reasons for ‘keeping the stranger among us’, not only the ‘stranger’ who has lost everything that gives meaning to his life but also the ‘stranger’ whose life is marked by wickedness.

John Quilter teased out some political consequences of what he saw as the current conservative conception of international relations which, though it does not make reference to the ‘stranger’, nonetheless insists on a sharp contrast between resident citizens (who are taken to be individually self-assertive and economically independent) and political strangers (who are portrayed as invading the privacy of ‘our’ national space).

Warren Reich argued that the narrative of the Good Samaritan provides us with the best way of understanding our responsibilities to care for the needy stranger. The story does not portray the stranger as one who deserves to be well-treated. Rather it is a story about someone who, in acting as a neighbour, helps himself too: after all, it is a parable about what one must do to gain eternal life! Modern society’s tendency to see helping others as a suppression of the self is, to that extent, heretical.

There is much else in the following pages which record the activities of the Centre’s staff during the last year. However readers will notice that these same themes found their way not only into the presentations at our Annual Seminar but also into our daily work.

On behalf of the staff of the Plunkett Centre, Gerald Gleeson, Stephen Buckle, Helen McCabe, Warren Reich and Linda Purves, I have pleasure in presenting the Annual Report for 2005.
